What is axe to grind?

Sun City homeowner George T. McClain (“Conflict of interest,” Sun City Independent, Sept. 18, 2013) puts forth a reasonable question about RCSC Gen. Manager Jan Ek, who owns five Sun City properties, having a conflict of interest advising the board on policies that may affect her investments.

Outraged rebuttals from (former) RCSC board members like Craig Brown and Phil Cook in Mrs. Ek’s defense are laughable. Both men are directly responsible for the class-action lawsuit I am working to bring against the RCSC on behalf of the members. They voted to illegally raise the quorum for membership meetings; Mr. Brown got rid of the Legal Committee when James Treece informed him what they were doing was illegal; and Mr. Brown was defeated in his re-election bid but was appointed anyway when a board member abruptly quit after the election.

At the Sept. 26, 2013, board meeting, the board illegally voted for $30 million worth of projects without a membership vote. Our attorney sent the board a letter telling them it was illegal. No response from their attorney was forthcoming. Again. The third time. We are fundraising for the class-action lawsuit to stop them.

Attention critics: you are backing the wrong horse. FYI: Critic Amber Henshaw to my knowledge is not in the white pages, has no RCSC facilities agreement, and is not on the property tax rolls. The only “Ambers” I could find are under 55. What’s her axe to grind?
